SHELTER OF THE WINGS

Lakhinder follows his hereditary profession as a bird-catcher, but with the irony of his having an intense love for the victims of his trade. This love becomes an obsession, especially after the death, some six or seven years earlier, of his three-year-old Son, Netal. His passion, and his habit of freeing almost as many birds as he catches, puts his marriage in both emotional and economic jeopardy. As he pursues his dreams through their metaphor, the birds, his wife, Sari, develops a relationship with another man, Natobar.

Lakhinder makes an effort to save his marriage by taking a consignment of birds to sell in Calcutta, but when the trader innocently reeds him wild goose from Lakhinder's own district, the bird-catcher vehemently renounces his trade and, as a consequence, loses his wife to Natobar.

After the final, violent endeavour to be reconciled with his wife, Lakhinder lets her go. Becoming one with his beloved birds, he now enjoys the shelter of the wings.

L'ABRI DE LEURS AILES

Lakhinder exerce le métier de ses ancêtres, la chasse aux oiseaux. Mais, chose curieuse, il aime éperdument les oiseaux qu'il capture. Sa passion était devenue une véritable obsession six ou sept ans auparavant lors de la mort de son jeune enfant, Nital.

Il relâche presque tous les oiseaux qu'il capture, ce qui met son mariage en péril, tant sur le plan économique que matrimonial. Alors qu'il est tout absorbé par les oiseaux, sa femme s'éprend de Natobar.

Pour tâcher de sauver son mariage, Lakhinder, va vendre des oiseaux à un grossiste de Calcutta. Mais quand ce marchand lui sert une assiette d'oiseaux de son village, Lakhinder rompt à jamais avec son ménier... et sa femme s'envole avec Natobar.

Lakhinder tente en vain de regagner sa femme, mais après une violente querelle il la laisse partir. Lui et ses oiseaux ne font plus qu'un, et Lakhinder se réfugie à l'abri de leurs ailes.

DER SCHUTZ DER FLÜGEL

Lakhinder geht seinem ererbten Beruf als Vogelfänger nach, allerdings mit der Ironie, daß er eine intensive Liebe zu den Opfern dieses Gewerbes hegt. Diese Liebe wird zur Besessenheit, besonders nach dem einige Jahre zurückliegenden Tod seines dreijährigen Sohnes Nital. Seine Leidenschaft, und seine Gewohnheit, fast alle gefangenen Vögel wieder freizulassen, führt seine Ehe in eine emotionale und finanzielle Krise. Während er seinen Träumen durch ihre Metapher, die Vögel, folgt wendet sich seine Frau Sari einem anderen Mann, Natobar, zu.

Lakhinder unternimmt den Versuch, seine Ehe zu retten, indem er eine Sendung Vögel zum Verkauf nach Calcutta bringt. Als aber dort der Vogelhändler ihn ohne böse Absicht Wildgänse aus Lakhinders Heimatgegend vorsetzt, sagt sich der Vogelfänger hitzig von seinem Beruf los und verliert als Folge seine Frau an Natobar.

Nach einem letzten, gewalttätigen Versuch, seine Frau zurückzugewinnen, lässt Lakhinder sie ziehen. Er wird eins mit seinen geliebten Vögeln und steht nun im Schutz ihrer Flügel.

Director's Statement

In "charachar" (shelter of the wings), the interior world of Lakhinder is similar to that of a creative artist who does not want to compromise with the world around him. After the final fight with his circumstances in "Bagh Bahadur" my protagonist steps into the world of realisation in "Tahader Katha". In "Charachar" he does not want to fight because he has realised that life is not merely a catching and selling of birds, it is much more.

The situation is the same for me – making a film is not just another job to be done. It is the continuous search of the innerself through the extension of reality.
